you know, always on my own—though, of course, I've got the dear old Wuffy-dog.'

'Grrrrrr!' said Wuffy again, and walked slowly over to Funny, showing all his white teeth.

'I suppose he's cross because I threw him into the bush,' said Funny. 'Never mind—he'll soon get used to me—and we'll be three good friends together. Come along.'

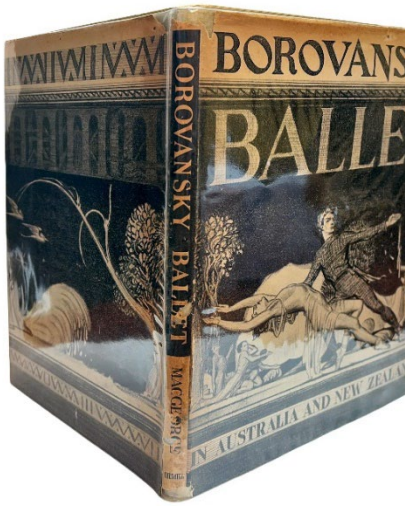

So they all went off together, and the clown sang a song very loudly indeed.

Oh, never mind the weather,
We'll laugh at rain or snow,
So long as we're together
Quite happily we'll go!
So do stop growling, Wuffy,
Don't look as if you'll bite,
It's silly to be huffy
When the sun is shining bright!
Oh, never mind the weather,
We'll be a Happy Three,
Huffy, gruffy Wuffy
And little Bom — and ME!

86 A VOYAGE TO

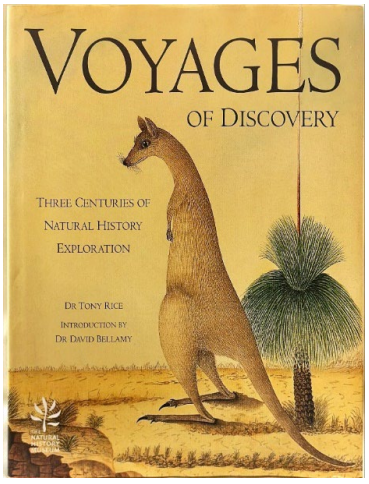

CHAPTER X.

Departure of the French ships—Death of M. Le Receveur—Return of the Supply from Norfolk Island—Description of that Place—Howe Island discovered.

CHAP. X. 1788. March 10th. ON the 10th of March, the French ships sailed from Botany Bay. M. De la Peyrouse during his stay there had set up two long boats, the frames of which he had brought with him from Europe. There had not been much intercourse between the French and English in this interval: both being too busily employed to waste their time in parties of pleasure. Captain Clonard had waited on Governor Phillip with the letters which were to be forwarded to the French ambassador; and a few of the English officers had gone over by land about the same time to pay a visit in Botany Bay; both parties were of course received with politeness and hospitality. Some few of the convicts contrived to abscond, and endeavoured to get admitted into the French ships, but were, with great propriety, rejected. Those vessels returned and she was leaning against the wall, hugging herself with her thin arms, her head on one side, her waving fair hair falling over one eye as she watched Mr Jacobs with curiosity. She asked her ritual question with the untiring curiosity of a child who wants to be told the same frightening story once again.

"Mr Jacobs, would you really do anything for money, really?"

"You bet." He lit a long thin cigar and put his feet on the desk. Each time he put the cigar to his mouth the terrible forearms emerged from his grey dustcoat. She thought of octopuses lurking beneath rocks in shallow pools.

"Would you walk naked in the street for a thousand dollars?"

"I'd do it for five hundred, doll."

"You'd go to jail."

"No, I'd be fined. I could pay the fine and still make a profit."

"Would you drink, you know . . ." she faded off, suddenly embarrassed by what she had said.

"No, I don't know." He smirked. She hated his smirk. He knew what she meant because he had said he would do it before. He had said he would drink piss if there were money in it. She wanted to hear him say it again.

"You know, drink 'it'."

"Piss, would I drink piss for money?"

"Yes." Her pale face burned. "That."

"How much piss?"

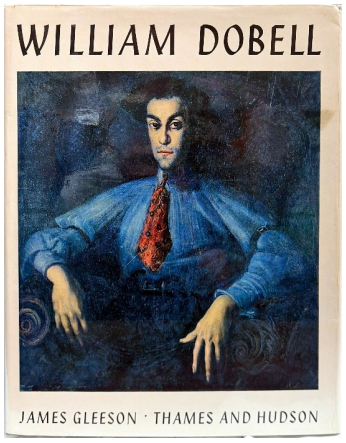

"A teaspoonful."

"Forty dollars." It was strange the way he said that, the same tone of voice that he used when he
